

In an email dated December 10, 2012, NASBA informed the Board that effective January 1, 2013, in lieu of scratch paper and pencils, candidates will be provided with two double-sided, laminated, colored sheets called "noteboards," as well as a fine point marker for making notations.

The candidates will be directed to write their examination Launch Code (from their NTS) on the noteboards. Candidates will be required to return the noteboards to the test center staff when the examination is complete. If candidates need additional writing space, they may request additional noteboards from the test center staff, but candidates must first turn in the original noteboards in order to get a new supply. Candidates cannot bring any paper or pencils to the workstation in the testing room.

NASBA will be posting information on its website, making changes to the candidate bulletin, and sending out an email to candidates.
